

When analyzing running time, we ignore constants because higher order relationships will always take longer than lower order relationships for large enough n .

For example, for $n < 50$, the order n^2 algorithm is faster. However, for larger values of n , the green linear algorithm is always faster.

